How to Play Texas Hold'em:

A player is picked at random to deal first, the "Dealer Token" is placed in front of them. With the next person clockwise having the Small Blind and the person after that being the Big Blind. After each completed hand, the Tokens are moved one place clockwise around the table. The dealer will give two cards face down to each player (these are called "Pocket Cards") – Do NOT let any other player see your cards.

A round of betting will take place. (See explanation of betting below)

The dealer will turn over (3) community cards, face up, on the centre of the table. This is called the "flop". Thus each player with his own pocket cards and the flop already has the equivalent of a five card poker hand.

Players can re-evaluate their hand and a second round of betting will take place.

The dealer will turn over a fourth community card on the table. This card is called the "turn", before a third round of betting takes place.

The showdown: Each player may use the best 5 of the community and pocket cards to make a hand. The players who have not previously folded their cards, show their hands. The best hand wins all of the chips that have been bet. See end of these instructions to identify best hand.

How to bet:

To insure there is always money in the pot, each hand starts with “blinds”. The blind should be pre-agreed with the host of the poker event prior to the start and can be anything above two chips. Prior to seeing their cards, the first player to the left of the dealer needs to place half of the pre-agreed blind and the second player must place the entire blind. The betting will then continue from the third player. This is done once, prior to the first round of betting – if the small blind wants to continue with the hand they must equal the big-blind or whatever the betting has been raised to.

After the initial blind is placed, the rest of the players in turn have three choices. They can fold, call (match the bet of the previous player) or raise a bet (call and make an incremental bet). A round of betting is finished when all remaining players have acted at least once and have contributed the same amount to the pot. The cumulative number of raises for each round of betting shall not exceed three.

The blind is only played on the first round of betting subsequent rounds give players the option to “check” whereby they do not add to the betting pot.

As an option you may play a No-Limit game. There are pre-agreed blinds as well as a designated opening bet. After that, any player may bet any amount of money he has on the table. A player has the option to go “All in” and bet all the chips they have. A player is never obliged to drop out of contention because they do not have a sufficient number of chips to match a bet. The excess amount of the bet is either returned to the player or used in a side pot with other players who matched the entire amount of the bet.

This is not a toy, please always play responsibly.

Hierarchy of Hands

The below images show the order of best hands possible in Texas Hold'em – 1 being the best and 10 being the worst.
